

General Bio

Andrew Clarke is the General Counsel of ExxonMobil International Limited in the U.K. with a regional oversight role, reflecting the diverse nature of the ExxonMobil Group's business in the U.K., Europe and the Caspian. He joined Mobil North Sea Limited (now a part of the ExxonMobil Group) in 1987 and has worked in several countries in addition to the U.K., including Indonesia, Turkey, America, Singapore and Qatar. He has a good command of Turkish and reasonable French and Indonesian. Educated at Magdalen College School in Oxford; Stowe School in Buckinghamshire and Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (MA (Hons) Law), he was admitted as a barrister at Middle Temple in 1981 and qualified as such before becoming an in-house lawyer. Current appointments include: Advisory Council to the Centre of Commercial Law Studies (QMUL) (also Chair of the Working Group supporting the Energy and Natural Resources Law Institute, Steering Committee (and Past Chair) of the Corporate Counsels' International Arbitration Group (CCIAG), and the Governing Board of the International Council for Commercial Arbitration (ICCA). Andrew is also a Member of the Advisory Board to the Turkish Commercial Law Review and was appointed a Bencher of the Middle Temple in 2009. In addition to his legal work, Andrew is also a keen vigneron, with his own property in Chablis, France.