

WORLD IN ACTION

TOR and HANNE ENGELSTAD and son from Kongsberg, Norway, have joined Norway's 'Future in Our Hands' movement, campaigning for a new lifestyle in the interests of the environment, the Third World and a better life. Tor and Hanne now grow their own food. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 20-21

MARY HARVEY, from New York, USA, is a member of a watchdog group encouraging churches to use their shares and stocks in big companies to vote for social change. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 7

TOMOKO ISHIKAWA, from Tokyo, Japan, has started a campaign called 'Blue Tent 75' to warn people about the hazards of synthetic detergents, food additives, and agricultural chemicals to the environment and health. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 8

PRIEST ROBERTO SARDELLI from Rome, Italy, started a school for slum-dwellers to organise demonstrations and write letters to the authorities for a better deal. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 27

YEN OUYOU SATO, from Tokyo, Japan, is a Buddhist priest and activist who has started a 'Green Party' to promote environmental and human rights. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 11

CLAIRE BERTHET, a social worker from Geneva, Switzerland, helped to encourage 13,000 old age pensioners to get together and petition for higher pensions and lower tax bills. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 35

FARMER ALFRED GIACOBINO from Vernezio, Switzerland, has convinced over 2,000 other Swiss citizens who support the 'Do Without Meat' campaign. They think cereals should be used to feed people in the poor world rather than cows in the rich world. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 9

STEVE SKINNER, from Watford, England, composes and sings songs about the unjust relationship between rich and poor countries. He is a member of CounterNet — teaching people media methods for community action campaigns. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 27

FLEMMING JOHNSEN, from Copenhagen, Denmark, is a member of the International Forum, is helping to plan a campaign for more and better aid to developing countries. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 31

ANNEKE ZANDSTRA, from Leiderdorp, Holland, thinks the most important campaign is to change people's attitudes about world development. She goes about it simply by talking about it to everyone she meets. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 27

THOMAS BJÖRLING from Gothenburg, Sweden, is one of hundreds of campaigners throughout Europe supporting the boycott of grapes and lettuce from California, USA, where the low-paid farm workers are struggling to form a union to fight for a better deal. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 14-15

MAISE CROFT, from Sheffield, England, heard about the starving in Bangladesh, so brewed with a kitchen cup and shopping basket, she walked the streets of Sheffield collecting two tons of tin for them. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 7

'BITTEN MODAL from Oslo, Norway, is a member of Norway's 'New Feminists'. When a newspaper carried a sex page with nude women she and other members invaded the editor's office. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 3

HELLMUTH FISCHER, from Munich, West Germany, with other students started a public relations service for action groups. They print regular publications with lists of action groups and books about the Third World. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 17

JUN UJI, from Tokyo, Japan, has started a citizens environment movement called Jishu Kosa. He says, 'I'm most advanced in anti-pollution groups — and his movement acts as an information network'. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 4

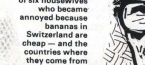

TOBIAS, from New Zealand, is the youngest crewman aboard the peace ship FRI, voyaging the world's waters urging countries to give up nuclear weapons and work for peace. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 11

SISTER TERESE McGARRELL, from Colorado, USA, has started a local chapter of 'Bread for the World', a 'nation-wide grass-roots movement against world hunger'. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 8

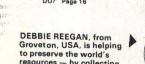

ANNA FRANCHI, from Frascati, Switzerland, is one of six housewives who became annoyed because bananas in Switzerland are cheap — and the countries where they come from stay poor. They became more angry when a supermarket reduced bananas again by 15 cents — they sent the money back and started their own banana action. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 16

ESAU DU PLESSIS, from Leiden, Holland, is hitting back at Apartheid. He helped organise a successful national boycott of Outspan oranges from South Africa. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 15-16

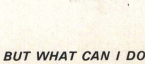

DEBBIE REGAN, from Greenon, USA, is helping to preserve the world's resources — by collecting aluminium drinking cans for recycling. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 5

KEN ALBINGER, from Boston, USA, is a recent recruit to 'Voaction for Social Change' — an alternative jobs bureau trying to find less soul-destroying work. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 2

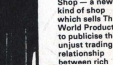

ANIK HUGUENIN from Geneva, Switzerland, is a volunteer in a Third World Shop — a new kind of shop which sells Third World Products to publicise the unjust trade relationship between rich world-poor world. There are hundreds in Europe, North America and Australia — the first international chain store for a more just world. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 18-19

JOAN HULL, from New York, USA, one of the few 'top women' in a US company, is now campaigning for equal opportunities for other women. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 1

ANNIE DOY, from Geneva, Switzerland, concerned when her son lost interest in school after being 'graded' into a lower class. She got together with other parents and started an education action group. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 24-25

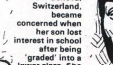

ERIN PIZZEY, from London, England, has started an action group to give protection to women who have been beaten up by their husbands. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 34

Alderman ROEL VAN DUYN and inventor LIJUD SHIMMELPENNINK, from Amsterdam, Holland, have helped introduce the electric 'White Car' — small, emissionless, quiet, less polluting. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 3

JUSS BUS, started by law students in Oslo, Norway, is a moving free legal advice service for those who couldn't normally afford it. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 38

LARRY WALKER, from the Third World Centre in Fort Wayne, USA, helped organise a 'nutritional supper' for 30 acts a head to show that it is possible for people to eat healthily and cheaply. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 8 and 19

JARAN DAMMANN from Oslo, Norway, has started a magazine with friends about the poor children in developing countries. They sell their mug to other children — and the money goes to an African children's hospital. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 5

BAREND DE RONDEN, from Hilversum, Holland, is a Dutch journalist campaigning for changes in the trade and aid relationship between rich and poor world — by using Holland's unique 'Open Door' system of selection. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 27

PATRICK and SHIRLEY RIVERS, from Chesport, England, gave up their comfortable London flat to live in a crumble cottage on a few derelict acres near the Welsh border. Their aim — to have less impact on the environment. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 9

GILBERT HUBERT from Ghent, Belgium, helped organise a campaign against the Belgian Government spending 30 billion francs ($304 million) on new fighter planes for the armed forces. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 10

SVETZE FERWERDA, from The Hague, Holland, is one of thousands who are called up to join the army each year — but refuse. He is also one of over 80,000 people in the industrialised world who tax themselves for world development. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 11-12

ODETTE RUSSON, from Dreux, France, has helped win her town with Koussou, West Africa — making fund-raising of a personal two-way process. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 31

ODETTE RUSSON, from Dreux, France, has helped win her town with Koussou, West Africa — making fund-raising of a personal two-way process. YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? Page 31

Front page of the new 'Yes But What Can I Do?' newspaper.

THE PROBLEM
The Daily World

10,000 DIE IN FAMINE

UN calls for new economic order

Environment gets a Strong warning

342,500 people due today in 'Baby-Boom'

Health gap is faster than ever

Third World unemployed nears 30%

YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO?

YES BUT WHAT CAN I DO? is the common cry of countless citizens in the developed world as they see and hear about the world food situation, the population explosion, the danger to the environment, the threat of nuclear war, the poverty of half the world and all the other problems which now confront the earth community. This poster shows some of the people featured in a new publication — 'Yes But What Can I Do?' — which profiles over 150 actions and campaigns for world development by groups and individuals in the industrialised world.

THE PUBLICATION (shown right) is part of a 'Study and Action Pack for World Development' which also contains colour wall charts and posters, flyers and a special magazine on the 'New Economic Order'. The complete Pack is sponsored by six United Nations agencies and by the Government of the Netherlands for use by media, teachers, churches, non-governmental organisations, and groups and individuals everywhere who are concerned to know more and do more about world development.

Forty pages and over 150 articles profiling the people, the ideas and the action in the fight for world development.